The Peace of God Jean Cook

This is only one of the expressions found abundantly in the New Testament, which describes the Christian's experience in the most attractive language, and contribute to it elements which are not practically to be found in the ordinary Christian life. Such language as this stirs the imagination. It attracts our desire deeply. But it seldom is answered in any development or experience in practical life.

If by peace is meant simply a negation of painful excitement, almost all dull nature has that; but surely, this is not what is meant. Is there no peace for acute vitality? Is there no peace for strong and active natures? Is there no peace for men and women through whose bosoms roll tides of passionate emotion? Is peace only a gentle fatigue, or soul-sleep, after a stormy life? Is it ashes when the flame is burned out? Or, is there a quality of peace which goes along with energy; with overflowing fullness of emotion; with acute sensibility; with great energy and power?
